

Dr Katrina Anderson is Associate Professor, General Practice, Academic Unit of General Practice, Australian National University Medical School. She has been an educator of medical students, junior doctors and GP registrars for over twenty years and has a specific interest in patient centred medicine and compassionate care. She is currently the Chair of the Child and Community Health Semester for third year medical students and the Director of Prevocational Training in General Practice in the SENSW and ACT region. Katrina was Director of GP Vocational Training in the region for eight years until 2012 but continues to be involved in delivering education for GP registrars around patient centred care and psychological and emotional issues. Katrina's main area of expertise is around the "Art of Healing " and she has been delivering workshops around giving bad news and dealing with loss and grief to students, junior doctors and GP registrars for many years. She also runs workshops for supervisors around meaning in medicine. In 2010 she introduced "The Healers Art "course to Australia, a course designed by Rachel Naomi Remen in the US to engage students in a life journey of compassionate patient centred care.

Katrina is a practising GP in Canberra.
